RURAL EMPLOYMENT GENERATION IN TRIBAL COMMUNITY

K.P. Singh, Beena Singh, Rajat Bansal, Indrajeet Singh and Nikhilesh Hari

The Bastar district lies in natural forest area with various types of tribal communities. It is abundantly and richly endowed with forest resources (45-60%). The forests in this district can be divided into four belts, namely, Northern mixed forests, Central moist region comprising of Sal belts, teak belt zone and the dry region comprising of mixed forests. Out of these the major types of forests are Sal forests, teak forests and mixed forests. The major portion of the forest area is covered with Sal forest which mostly lies on the plateau. In the hilly region, Sal is confined to narrow valleys and on lower slopes. Podu cultivation by felling of forest is the general practice of the tribal population in the project area. Agricultural crops like Ragi, Sama, Paddy, Rajmash, Niger and other pulses are also raised in the area for one or two seasons. After cultivation of the above crops for one or two seasons the farmers move on to the nearest new forest areas since the soil becomes depleted and repeat the same process of destroying the forests. The practice of podu/shifting cultivation has caused denudation of forests, which is a serious threat to the ecology, resulting in soil erosion and siltation of the river basins.

Traditionally the tribal communities of the villages were not used to the cultivation of horticultural crops and all of them were engaged in agronomical crops cultivation. For livelihood people from the region used to migrate to neighbouring states like Telangana, Andhra Pradesh, Maharashtra and Kerala. Migration of labour is an important factor affecting the course of socio-economic development of any area. Employment is seen as the primary driver of migration, especially rural to urban migration. Employment generation is the most important indicator of development in any country. More the number of unemployed, more will be the burden on economy as the unemployed are fed by the employed.

Horticulture is one of the fastest growing sectors in India and contributes immensely in poverty eradication and nutritional security of the population. This sector has immense scope to increase income and employment and helps in sustaining large number of industries. Horticultural crops play a unique role in

FOREST MANAGEMENT AS A CAREER

Nidhi Prasad

Forest management is an important discipline. With the advancement of technology, there is a need to relook at the area keeping in view the challenges we are facing in connection with our environment. With the development of technology the life has become very comfortable but somewhere it has also threatened the very existence of human life.

As you know that forests are called the lungs of the environment! They are a factory of oxygen and various other very important natural resources.

Forest is a natural system. Forest management is a branch of forestry and is a process in which forests are tended, harvested and regenerated with overall administration that includes legal, economic, and social aspects.

In simple words, Forest

Management is the development and implementation of a plan integrating all of the techniques, practices and principles required to take care of the forests. It is the science and craft of creating, managing, using, conserving and repairing forests and associated resources for human and environmental benefits.

HOW TO PURSUE A CAREER IN FOREST MANAGEMENT ?

Many colleges and universities in the country offer undergraduate and postgraduate courses in forestry by way of

B.Sc. (Forestry) and M.Sc. (Forestry) respectively. A student must have passed Higher Secondary (class XII) in Science stream with Physics, Chemistry and Biology (PCB) as compulsory subjects. This makes you eligible to apply for a B.Sc. in Forestry. If you want to dive deeper into this field, you can go for M.Sc. in Forestry which is a two-year program. Most of the agricultural institutes and universities are offering these courses.

For a master's degree in forestry, graduates in Science with subjects of Physics, Chemistry and Biology or Agriculture/ Horticulture/ Forestry are considered eligible. The specializations offered here are Forest Management, Forest Products, Wildlife Science, Forest Economics, Commercial Forestry, Agro-forestry to name a few. You can further study and apply for M.Phil./Ph.D in this field to become a scholar and open more doors for oneself.

Most of the institutes/universities have a general course in forestry. However, some of these offer courses with specialization in particular branches in forestry. Topics covered under a forestry course include plantation forestry, social forestry, agro-forestry, ecology, biodiversity, tree improvement, forest hydrology and watershed management, wood science and technology, forest goods and the Indian economy by improving the income of the farmers. Cultivation of these crops is labour intensive and lot of employment is generated for the rural people. Growing of high value crops on big scale not only conserves the resources but also makes the farmers prosperous. Thus, resource conservation also gives rise to more productivity and growth which ultimately results in employment generation.

The justification for encouraging Coffee Plantations in the land of tribals is based primarily on livelihood and economic sustainability. It would therefore be useful to analyze the relative returns which are likely to accrue to the farmers on taking up various crops. Through Coffee Plantation the farmers will be capable of generating returns which would be higher than the returns from other dry land agriculture crops. Coffee is mainly cultivated in deep fertile jungle soils under a two tier mixed shade canopy comprising of evergreen leguminous and non-leguminous shade plants. When growing under shade it has several advantages. Shade plants provide a natural habitat for vast population of birds and natural enemies of insect pests/diseases that helps in reducing the soil erosion, contribute towards the fertility of coffee soils by recycling nutrients from deep soil in the form of leaf litter and finally protect the coffee bushes from vagaries of changing weather conditions.

The soil and climatic conditions of Bastar are quite similar to the southern states of country where coffee is cultivated in large areas. The land forms and climatic factors of Bastar confirm that it satisfies the climatic requirements for coffee cultivation. The forest soils are rich in nutrients. It ranges from shallow to deep, friable with pH from 4.5 to 7.0 and lies at an elevation of 500 to 1276 meters above mean sea level. Rainfall ranges from 1300-1800 mm with frequent showers during summer season. The present study is being undertaken under the Darbha block of Bastar. It is located at 18°52' N 81°55'E and at elevation of 678m above MSL. The area of orchard is 20 acres. It is a mixed forest area where plantation of mango, silver oak and jackfruit is also done to provide additional shade.

This is the foremost attempt that has been made to commercialize the production of coffee in Bastar. The work was started in the year 2017-18 under the funding agency District Mineral Foundation Trust (DMFT scheme). The economic prospect and commercial benefits of coffee is now attracting rural people toward its production. Keeping in view of the economic upliftment of farmers and to increase their standards of living, the development of Coffee plantation project was initiated in barren lands. It is also a measure to increase the forest cover and to provide ecological and environmental balance in the tribal/hilly areas.

The Coffee Plantations in the lands of tribals has been found to provide sustainable income to the tribal farmers and the cultivation of coffee would provide relatively better income to the farmers than other crops.

Objective of project

- To introduce and evaluate the new crop model (including Coffee) in non-traditional areas.
- To address deforestation issues utilizing the barren lands and to minimize laborers migration from remote villages of Bastar.
- To generate employment and livelihood security to the tribal farmers through coffee production and multi crop intercropping round the year.
- To establish marketing linkages of processed coffee among SHGs & National agencies.

The seeds of coffee varieties have been procured from the Regional Coffee Centre, Koraput, Odisha. The growth of plants is in a fine condition and most of them are already started in their bearing stage. The yield will be recorded from the present year alongwith the evaluation of its quality. Other crops like groundnut, arhar and toria has been also been grown to combat initial income as well as to utilize the available resources and time of farmers. The details of the varieties grown in Darbha are as follows:

Arabica varieties

1. San Ramon: alternate bearing habit with an yield potential of 10 to 15 q / ha
2. Chandragiri: Yield potential of 15 to 18 q/h
3. Selection-8: Moderate yielder of around 12 q/h
4. Selection-9: Yield potential of 13 to 17 q/h

Robusta variety

1. CxR has an yield potential of 20 to 22 q/h under irrigated condition while in the rainfed conditions, it yields around 10 to 15 q/ ha

There is an immense scope for larger scale production of Coffee, particularly Robusta type in Bastar Plateau. Intercropping with black pepper, custard apple, cinnamon, clove and nutmeg is also feasible.

Implementing an innovative project to meet tribal farmer's requirement

I. Model-I: Intensive coffee plantation involving set of recommended varieties to the maximum crop intensity. Under this model a set of four varieties of Coffee arabica (viz. Sam Ramon, S-8, S-9 and Chandragiri dwarf) and C. robusta (viz. CxR) were planted and evaluated for yield and its attributes. Out of these the cv. Chandragiri dwarf and CxR are found to thrive well in the targeted area. Farmer's perception has also noticed to be high for these varieties. It is important to mention here that few farmers of Odisha in the adjoining places of Bastar are harvesting coffee with an yield in the range of 9-10 q/ha (Chandragiri variety and Selection 9).

II. Model-II: Intensifying the different intercrops of fruits/ shade trees like silver oak, mango, jackfruit, custard apple, guava and other dry land fruit species to utilize coffee plantation interspaces. Under this model the intercropping of above mentioned fruit and spices plants have already been planted and their continuance is under progress.

III. Model-III: Utilizing further left out interspaces/ canopy spaces in coffee plantation through various intercrops viz. black pepper pulses, oilseeds, leafy vegetables etc. Under this model intercrops like groundnut, horse gram, toria has been targeted for generating income during lean period as a further supplement of money to the farmers for growing next crops.

IV. Model-IV: Introducing processed products like filter coffee, green coffee as well as branding of the same and other intercrop produces. Under this model raw produce is being processed locally through SHGs and is being marketed by the brand name of Bastar Coffee.

Bringing perceptible improvements in project:

I. Through coffee cultivation the farmers of the area can fetch an amount of around Rs. 15000 - 20000 per acre (after 4th year of crop) even from the non-productive barren lands. Further an additional income of about Rs. 15000 per acre (after 4th year of crop) could be generated through various fruits and spices intercrops and Rs. 10000 per acre (from 1st year) from various intercrops grown in the initial stages of intervention which may enhance during later years. Thereby a total of Rs. 45000 per acre net income is targeted.

II. Deforestation issues could be entirely resolved and the farmers are much convinced for getting year round employment as well as income generation.

III. Utilization of van adhikar patta lands through recommended modern cultivation practices of coffee. Further, the community mode farming in such tribal and hilly villages can be promoted in near future for the left out communities.

IV. Availability of sufficient skilled manpower for labour intensive operations like manual weeding, shade regulation and soil conservation measures and the like gives year round employment and livelihood sustainability to the tribals.

V. The horticultural practices followed in the Indian coffee plantations are considered as one of the best in the world, in which emphasis is mainly towards manipulation of microclimate and plant health, so as to reduce excessive dependence on agrochemical inputs. It is one of the best cropping models that meets the afforestation techniques too.

New site: Popularizing non-traditional crops like coffee and black pepper is evoking high level of interest among the tribal farmers. This is one of the reasons owing to which a group of 48 farmers (including women farmers as well) are

CAREER OPPORTUNITIES IN FOREST MANAGEMENT

Forestry experts are in every sector of employment, but there are some areas where these professionals are in much higher demand. There is a great need for those who have the breadth of knowledge and skills gained during their pursuit of a forestry degree. Some of the popular sectors are:

1. CONSERVATION

Keeping forests robust and healthy for our social enjoyment is always a worthy pursuit, but conservation means much more than that. It means enough trees to sustain our way of life for future generations, using those trees to battle soil erosion and climate change, and preserving green spaces for the wildlife that need those trees as their habitat. Those who work in forestry tend to be conservationists at heart and will take care of forests in ways that keep them thriving.

2. SAFETY & ENFORCEMENT

Forestry experts can help with everything from keeping trails safe and neat to fighting the fires that rage through woodland areas and helping ensure proper tree planting to prevent widespread erosion. Forestry professionals do everything from hands-on work that keeps individuals safe in recreational areas to enforcing strict regulations on logging and farming operations.

3. EARTH SCIENCES

When it comes to how we interact with the earth, forests play a vital role. Trees remove around a quarter of the CO₂ humans add to the atmosphere, provide high levels of bioenergy, cool the air around them, and lead to more rainfall. They provide valuable protections for watersheds across the world, through which billions of people find their drinking water. Forests can prevent wide-scale erosion, which protects homes and businesses. Trees can also help change the soil over time, creating something richer, more mature, and perfect for farming. Forestry experts can find all sorts of ways to dive into these issues and make science their life's work.

4. TRANSPORTATION, INFRASTRUCTURE, SUPPLY CHAIN & LOGISTICS

Forests and the trees in them create many much-needed products, from paper products of all kinds to timber to build homes to the use of leaves in medical and personal care formulations. Forestry experts can help with all aspects of creating these items, from figuring out how to transport felled trees to keeping enough sustainable forests growing to maintain the supply chain, to looking at logistical concerns that will keep those products moving even as new seedlings begin to grow in places where the original trees were used for industry.

5. EDUCATION

The world of education needs forests for the most basic elements of teaching including paper, pencils, thousands of lessons in biology, a deeper understanding of rain cycles and soil conservation, and so much more. Forestry experts bring this kind of education to the public every day, teaching the young and old how to live in harmony with the natural world around them. Working in forestry education might take a person from the classroom to the forest, where they have the opportunity to impart knowledge and hope that will trickle down through generations of nature lovers.

6. LAW & POLICY

Forestry law is a type of environmental law that focuses on the regulations, rules, and sustainable activities that define the health of a forest for years to come. Experts in forestry law might fight to keep illegal things from happening, like logging or clear-cutting on protected land, seek ways to preserve forested areas, and help create the policy that protects the environment. This might include earning a degree in forestry and then going on to law school, or alternatively, working for years to gain the knowledge to become a forestry consultant for law firms and environmental think-tanks.

7. MANUFACTURING

Forest industry companies are looking to smart manufacturing to help them create their products in ways that don't disturb the ecosystem of a forest any more than necessary to extract the materials they need. Forestry experts who focus on these manufacturing techniques can help create a new way of looking at sustainable growth in forested areas that are used for logging and can work with companies to implement those strategies in a timely, efficient, and cost-effective manner.

Plethora of career opportunities is available in public as well as in private sector. The public sector jobs include work in:

- ♦ Zoological parks
- ♦ Wildlife ranges
- ♦ Corporate having their own plantations for timbering
- ♦ Wildlife research institutes
- ♦ Indian Council of Forestry Research and Education (ICFRE) and its affiliated institutes,
- ♦ Wildlife department
- ♦ Forest department
- ♦ National parks & sanctuaries
- ♦ Forest nurseries.

Those holding bachelor's degree in forestry can apply for the Central government through the Indian Forest Service (IFS) examination conducted by the Union Public Service Commission. There are opportunities galore for post graduates from recognised institutes who can easily get a job with many national and international organisations, NGOs, consulting firms and IT companies, natural resource management organisations and financial institutions.

Apart from the Indian Forest Service, other sectors where forest experts are employed include the paper and pulp industry, the plantation industry, companies engaged in manufacturing forest products, silviculture, social forestry, wasteland development, environment sector etc. There are several on-going, international forestry and Natural Resource Management (NRM) projects.

Fresh forest managers can look forward to good placements in International organisations like International Union for Conservation of Nature & Natural Resources, WWF, JBIC and agencies engaged in bilateral projects hire consultants and advisors offering plum posts for candidates with talent and grassroots experience.

The demand for professionals in forest management is tremendous and every state has its own forest management cell to counter the problem of dwindling forest cover. Forest managers in India have to walk the tight rope in trying to tackle problems like illicit felling, poaching, human interference and rampant encroachment. Moreover unlike other sectors like Info Tech, this sector is largely immune to market volatility, and thus, provides substantial job security and satisfaction.

New disciplines like adventure ecotourism and social forestry are also areas that you could branch out to. Your job profile will also require that you use your marketing skills to sell forest produce.

But growing populations are putting pressure on forests, and global warming is making trees more vulnerable to fire, clear cutting, and erosion. This means an increased need for soil scientists, fire ecologists, and other forestry professionals to enter the workforce.
